The work-in-progress story of the men who resisted the draft and those who supported them.

Nearly 60 years ago, against the background of the quiet conformity of the 1950s, in the face of a seemingly senseless war in a country they had never heard of, a small group of young men refused to register or serve in the U.S. Army.

For the first time, The Boys Who Said No! tells the story of their acts of courage and the movement that was born to resist war abroad and racism at home.

As we confront the resurgence of militarism, bigotry and nativism today, their story reminds us of what has always been best in our history – the fight against tyranny and hatred – and reminds us of what is possible when we act.
